NEXT ACTIVITY

We are excited to announce that focus groups are now underway as part of our project. In France, Slovenia, Spain, Greece, and Cyprus, we have gathered ten parents and ten professionals from each partner country to participate in discussions on existing psychological theoretical methods for parenting behavioral change. With a total of 100 participants, we aim to analyze the effectiveness of current parenting programs through the Focus Group discussions. This collaborative effort will result in a comprehensive report on expert identification and a psychological status report, highlighting the impact of these programs on participants. These discussions will help us identify gaps and needs in parenting trainings and support, and explore various theories explaining behavior change mechanisms.
